"I sold cancer drugs for 11 years. I made $340,000 a year convincing doctors to prescribe treatments I knew didn't work. Then one night, I saw the list. And I understood everything."

I was a senior sales representative for one of the top three pharmaceutical companies in the world. I won't name them yet. My lawyers are still working on my protection agreement under the Executive Order.

My job was simple: visit oncologists, buy them dinners, take them to conferences, and make sure they prescribed our chemotherapy drugs over the competitors. I was good at it. Top 1% nationally for seven consecutive years.

I never questioned it. The drugs had FDA approval. The doctors trusted me. The patients trusted them. The system worked — for everyone except the patients.

In November 2024, I was at a private dinner in Manhattan with three executives from my company. We had closed a $1.2 billion hospital network contract. Champagne. Cigars. The usual.

One of the executives left his phone on the table when he went to the bathroom. A notification popped up. It was an encrypted message. The preview read:

"Updated K-List attached. 2,847 names added this quarter. Confirm receipt."

I didn't touch the phone. But I remembered the term. K-List.

Over the next three months, I quietly asked around. Most people had never heard of it. But one senior colleague — a man who had been with the company for 30 years — went pale when I mentioned it.

He pulled me into a stairwell and said:

"The K-List is the kill list. It's every patient whose insurance profile makes them more profitable dead than alive. Long-term treatment patients who are about to hit their coverage cap. If they die before the cap, the company collects the full treatment cycle payment. If they live past it, the insurance stops paying and we lose money."

I said: "Are you telling me we let people die for billing optimization?"

He said: "We don't let them die. We make sure the treatment doesn't work well enough to save them. The dosing protocols are calibrated. Not to kill. Just to not cure."

I went home that night and threw up for an hour.

2,847 names added in one quarter. Four quarters a year. For how many years?

The math is simple. And the math is murder.

I resigned in January 2025. I took nothing with me except what I remembered. But when Executive Order 2026-1947 was signed, I contacted a lawyer. The NDA protections are dissolving. The whistleblower provisions are active.

I am one of dozens preparing to testify.

The pharmaceutical industry doesn't just suppress cures. It engineers death on a schedule. And every single executive knows it.

The K-List is real. The names on it are real. And in 34 days, the world will see it.

They didn't just hide the cure. They engineered the death.
